This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

NOTE.

This catalogue refers to the Printed Books and Manuscripts, part of the Collection bequeathed to the South Kensington Museum by the Reverend Alexander Dyce, who died May 15, 1869. A companion volume contains a catalogue of the remainder of the Bequest, the paintings, miniatures, drawings, engravings, rings, and miscellaneous objects. The following is an extract from Mr. Dyce's will.

"This is the last will of me, the Rev. Alexander Dyce, of Oxford Terrace, Paddington, Middlesex. As to all my books, works of art, and other such effects, I dispose of them as herein-after specially mentioned. And I appoint my friends, John Forster, of Palace Gate House, Kensington, esquire, and William Macpherson, of Lancaster Gate, esquire, executors of this my will. As to my collection of books and works of art, consisting of the whole of my rare and valuable and other books, and of my pictures, paintings, drawings, miniatures, antique rings, and curiosities, and all my printed books and manuscripts, and any other effects which may, in the opinion of my executors, come under the description of works of art or articles of vertu (the same being herein-after described as "my said collection") I give the same in manner following, in which I have had regard to the gift of the Sheepshanks collection of pictures and works of art, which I desire generally to follow, that is to say, I give and bequeath my said collection unto the Member of Her Majesty's Government for the time being charged with the promotion of art education now undertaken by the Department of Science and Art as the ex-officio trustee thereof, upon the following terms and conditions, viz.:

"1. That such ex-officio trustee do within six months from the probate of my will sign a memorandum of the acceptance of the trusteeship, and deliver the same to my executors, and to be by them copied on the probate of my said will, with a memorandum to be signed by them of such acceptance.

"2. That a proper and sufficient separate room or gallery in or near to the public buildings built, or to be built, for the Department of Science and Art, now called the South Kensington Museum, or elsewhere, be set apart or provided for the purpose of holding my said collection (to be called "The Dyce Collection"), and that my said collection be deposited and kept in such room or gallery.

"3. The right of property in, and possession of, my said collection shall be solely in the ex-officio trustee for the time being, but subject to the conditions herein-after expressed, and to be and remain always under his control, and he shall be the sole arbiter of any question that may arise touching the management or disposition thereof under this my will.

"4. My said collection shall be used for reference and instruction, and shall be exhibited to the public at such times and under such regulations as the ex-officio trustee shall prescribe, and so soon as arrangements can be properly made by him for that purpose; but no part of my said collection shall ever be sold or exchanged or be dealt with contrary to the true spirit and meaning of the use, disposition, and control thereof herein prescribed ; the books to be the subject of special care and preservation, and never to be lent or removed from the collection.

"5. My said collection, or the conditional bequest thereof hereby made, shall not be subject to the provisions of the Act of the 19 and 20 Victoria, cap. 29., intituled 'An Act to extend the Powers of the 'Trustees and Directors of the National Gallery, and to authorize the 'Sale of Works of Art belonging to the Public,' or to any future enactment of the legislature which but for this declaration to the contrary shall or may have the effect of placing my said collection under any other care or ordering than is herein prescribed, or would otherwise alter or interfere with the disposition thereof hereby made. And in case of such interference on the part of the legislature, or if the terms and conditions as herein expressed be not strictly adhered to (subject as after mentioned), or in case the said bequest should not be accepted as aforesaid, then and in either of such cases the gift thereof hereby made shall wholly cease, and my said executors or the ex-officio trustee for the time being, as the case may be, shall thereupon hold my said collection in trust for the University of Cambridge, to be added to and for ever thereafter form part of the Fitz-William Collection of the said university.

"6. The ex-officio trustee (or university aforesaid, as the case may require) shall provide for the payment (by Government or out of any funds available or to become available for the purpose) of the Government legacy duty which may become payable on the said collection, and also for so much and such part of the duty on the probate of this my will as shall be payable in respect of the estimated value of my said collection so hereby given for the purposes aforesaid, this provision being necessary as my general estate is otherwise of small comparative amount or value.

"In testimony whereof I have to this my will, written on six sheets of paper, set my hand, this Ninth day of March, in the year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine."

ALEXANDER DYCE.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

THIS word of biography is an attempt to comply with the wish of the authorities of the South Kensington Museum, that some account of Mr. Dyce should accompany the catalogue of the books forming part of the Dyce collections bequeathed to the museum for public use and enjoyment; though what the catalogue itself suggests might by some be thought sufficient without biographical addition. Drawn up with care and knowledge rarely bestowed on such performances, the books it completely describes represent as completely the several themes and subjects from which their owner drew all his pursuits as well as all his pleasures; and glancing through its pages however carelessly, one sees at once that here is a library not brought together haphazard, but collected for special tastes and requirements, and illustrating worthily the life of a scholar. All to whom Mr. Dyce was known will find everywhere the individual impress very strongly marked indeed.

The groups of books most prominent, in more than one literature, are the dramatic; and the range of English production in this field is extraordinarily wide, taking in every variety of stage-play as well as of the higher drama, down to the opening of the present century. It was a taste accidentally determined very early in life; and it gave ultimately a settled direction, in the form which proved to be most beneficial, to his critical and philological studies in later years. The next richest groups are the editions of ancient writers, abundant as they are admirable; and, with them, a rare and fine collection of the works of scholars and critics of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, presenting at their best such men as Heinsius, Reinesius, Meursius, Casaubon, the Scaligers, Scioppius, and Salmasius.

Testimony is thus borne alike to his scholarship and to the critical investigations on which it was first employed. To the same date belonged his liking for the Greek poets of the first five centuries, and for the later Platonists, all of whom enter worthy appearance beside their nobler predecessors. And of the same character, traceable in the same care for best editions, were his readings in English classical scholarship, which for him had no higher names than the first and the second Richard, Bentley and Porson. In much danger at one time that the best years of his own life, like theirs, might have been passed in critical amendments of ancient texts, a better genius happily interposed. The youthful accident that first made poetry and the theatre attractive to him, and which also gave him his first real interest in the noblest remains of antique learning, led him in middle life to those studies in English poetry attested by his matchless collection, in that department, of books quite priceless in their value. Beside these were gradually admitted the other principal masters of English literature; and here, to the close of his life, his labours and enjoyments wholly centered. Enriched with wide and varied stores of critical reading such as the greatest in this line might have envied, he became an English scholar; and, following in the ardour of pursuit on the tracks of many English poets, a study of Italian familiarized him with its masterpieces of romance and invention, which he then added to his books. But though he went to them first for help in regard to the writings of others, he stayed with them for love of their own. They were the principal solace of all his remaining leisure; and they helped with his translation of Athenæus, which had been the amusement of several previous years, to relieve his latest labour of preparing his third edition of the greatest of poets. With Shakespeare, on a little table by his bed at the last, were Athenæus and Ariosto.

Alexander Dyce, the eldest son of a general in the East India Company's Service, was born in George Street, Edinburgh, on the 30th of June 1798. His mother was a sister of Sir Neil Campbell, sometime British Commissioner with Napoleon at Elba, and afterwards Governor of Sierra Leone. His father was as nearly related to a very distinguished actor in Indian history, the mother of the General being the "Miss Ochterlony of "Tillifrisky," who took the Sir David of that name into her house at Aberdeen, treated him as one of her own children, and equipped him for his cadetship to India. She had married a substantial burgess occupying a house in the Broad Street of Aberdeen next to that in which Byron's mother lived, with Byron himself in his boyhood. The floor containing the poet's bed-room was occupied three years ago by a printer who described "hardly a week passing without some party or other "making pilgrimage to the spot." Within a stone's throw is the school Byron went to; and just at hand is Marischal College, where Dugald Dalgetty, another of the immortals, went to school.

Dyce's father and mother sailing for India the year after his birth, he was left in charge of his two paternal aunts at Aberdeen, the elder of whom had a mansion called Rosebank, a mile from the bridge of Dee, which he afterwards inherited from her. Here was passed all his boyhood, until he was ready for the Edinburgh High School; and his earliest recollections of were associated with a Major Mercer, whose verses when published by his brother-in-law Lord Glenbervie ran into a third edition, and who, with another then living celebrity, Beattie, represented to the admiring lad all that was poetically conceivable of the beautiful and sublime. Next to these, he was most impressed by what he was told of the eccentricities of Lord Monboddo, and of a very whimsical lord of session, Gardenstone, who would never use any knife and fork but his fingers in eating fish, and in travelling between Edinburgh and Aberdeen would always persist in going round by Stirling to avoid the danger of the Queen's Ferry!

"la bella Aberdona
Che del gran fiume Dea in riva è posta"

It was not till Dyce joined the High School that his taste for poetry took the decidedly dramatic turn, though there was a touch of the stage in his last boyish experience at Aberdeen. Miss Paton came there as a little girl with her mother, a singer of the Catalani school, and between the two parts of the mother's musical entertainment recited Alexander's Feast with a superabundance of gesticulation that delighted the small Alexander, who was full of glee when he saw her scampering round the room towards the end of the Ode, to supply the action of leading on the Macedonian Conqueror to fire the palace of the Persian Kings. Dyce visited Aberdeen not infrequently in his manhood, and after he had taken orders once preached at an English episcopal chapel in the Gallowgate, giving offence by taking his text from the Apocrypha; but the general impression left by him here was rather sporting than clerical or literary, if we are to take it from the remark of a friend of the family on hearing of his publishing old-plays, that he wondered a man should take to that who could fish so well with a fly.

Adam, the author of Roman Antiquities, was at this time, I believe, in the last year of his rectorship of the High School; but the Gazetteer which Dyce kept to the last among his grander books ("Brookes and Walker improved"), with the inscription, "Alexr. Dyce received this book as a premium at "the High School, August, 1811," tells us all we know of him in the famous academy; and it may be feared that his scholastic achievements in Edinburgh were somewhat eclipsed by his opportunity of indulgence in dramatic tastes and enjoyments.

This came to him as part of the cordial welcome that awaited him from an old lady who had been his mother's friend from her childhood; a woman of character, and very attractive. She was the widow of Smollett's nephew; her sister, under her maiden name of Renton, figuring in Humphrey Clinker; and in her oldest age she retained not a little of the vivacity of youth. Well acquainted with the higher literature, she was chiefly remarkable by her fondness for the theatre, where, not being ill or under any special engagement, she went every night: to the horror of presbyterian neighbours, who thought a woman of eighty, even if she ever indulged such unbecoming soul-ensnaring vanities, should long ago have abjured them. Still, every night at the theatre royal, full or empty, there sate in the box next the stage, either with a daughter or alone, the stately yet sprightly old gentlewoman in her black dress of somewhat obsolete fashion, with a large fan in her hand. Dyce remembered the fan for the part it played when he went with its mistress to see Blue Beard, and she tapped with it on the side of her box to motion back the Bashaw's attendants, and get her little friend full and unobstructed view of the pasteboard elephant with its rolling eyes. On other occasions there was loftier fare. He sat by the old lady's side, one night, to see John Kemble in Brutus; Mr. Walter Scott coming into the box with his wife at the end of the tragedy, and saying to Mrs. Smollett, on Kemble being announced to play Sir Giles Overreach next night, that Sir Giles was a Richard the Third in low life. Dyce had made a note of this before discovering something of the same remark in one of Scott's later writings on the stage. But it was not the author of Marmion, or any other celebrity one would now be apt to select, to whom the Edinburgh folk then reverentially looked up as their representative man in letters. This they found in the (if it must be said) by no means first-rate novelist and essayist, whose association was with the glory of the past, the author of the Man of Feeling, Henry Mackenzie; whose thin tall form, Dyce, a few days before he left for Oxford, had intense interest in seeing as he walked rapidly through the streets of his native city, in a scanty brown wig, a plain black suit with long gaiters, and supporting rather than supported by a stout gold-headed cane. The last touch of the picture recalls his own familiar presence at old book-shops and sale-rooms in London streets half a century later, the stout walking-stick giving no support to the tall bent figure, but borne always aloft before it. The face which in these Edinburgh days, judging from the photograph of a miniature belonging to his mother, must have been a very type of attractive boyhood, animated, intelligent, and handsome, had borne well, then, all the interval of years; in manners ever studiously courteous and quiet, he was in the later days still the "gentle giant" they had called him in his youth; but he stooped very much, as men above the average height are given to do, and his now massive person had ceased to receive much advantage from the scrupulous attention he had once paid to the superficials of dress. His brother the General thus described to me the amount of his luggage on the occasion of a week's visit to himself at Southampton. "He brought seven shirts and a "Sophocles."

Dyce's father, whose promotion in the Madras army had been very rapid, was extremely eager to secure to his eldest son the advantages of the El Dorado which India in his day continued to be: but "Alick" steadily stood out against his father's plan, left its profits to his brothers, and, on the General insisting as an alternative that he should adopt the Church for a profession, he took orders; though this had not been his intention on first entering into residence at Exeter College, Oxford, in the winter of 1815. There he took up with much zeal the study of the classics, and was assiduous at lecture; but his earliest and strongest tastes remained. The 1775 edition of Gray's Poems in his library has this manuscript note: "When an undergraduate at Oxford I "bought this volume of R. Bliss the bookseller, paying for it "two guineas, and it is now worth about half-a-crown." He might have added by way of set-off that not many years later he bought for two shillings, bound up in a ragged volume of otherwise worthless pieces, one of the rarest of the Shakespeare quartos worth at least as many hundred pounds. Of course his passion for the stage as well as for English poetry had accompanied him to Oxford; and he was still in statu pupillari when he approached the "Great John" (Kemble) with a respectful written request to be informed which was the particular night fixed for his farewell appearance? Kemble's reply had the gravity and stateliness as of the utterance of a bishop, and was to the effect that he didn't know himself. It turned out however to be the 29th of June, 1817; and at one o'clock on that day, Dyce, who had travelled up from Oxford, found himself at the pit-door of Covent Garden theatre, in a group of a dozen other enthusiasts, who, by the time of the opening of the doors at half-past six, had become wedged in among masses of people exceeding by many hundreds what the pit could hold. Borne along the lobby in a fearful rush, he alighted luckily upon a seat next the orchestra, and there saw Coriolanus. He gave an account of it which Campbell published; but I was more struck by his verbal description of the contrast that Kemble presented, between what he had been that night on the stage, and what he was when he came at the close before the curtain to utter his farewell. Unreality and reality were suddenly brought face to face; and the spectators assembled for the grandest show that could attend an actor's life, saw unexpectedly the most pitiable also, which yet with equal certainty accompanies it in its highest successes and worst failures. During the tragedy Kemble's bearing had been erect, his tread firm and stately; but in his own person after it, he entered stooping, dragging his feet after him, gasping for breath, wiping his tears with trembling hand, and in his agitation unconsciously twisting his pocket-handkerchief round his fingers. It was as if visibly before the lookers-on, a real Melmoth were passing from manhood into age.

In the same month, two years later, Dyce saw a greater performer act for the last time. Mrs. Siddons's first farewell had been taken seven years before, and her fame had not profited by subsequent appearances in aid of family benefits; but Dyce always spoke of portions of this particular performance of Lady Randolph on that night as a thing quite apart in his memory. This was confirmed by Macready, who played Glenalvon; and who told me that when, after her caution about Norval, putting aside as needless Glenalvon's gaze as though he'd "pry" into her "heart," she said her look, gesture, and tone were so startling in the majesty of their perfect simplicity, that he forgot himself, the scene, the words of his part, everything! His only other like experience was while playing in the School for Scandal with Mrs. Glover, and Mrs. Candour says to Joseph Surface "By the bye, I hope 'tis not true "that your brother is absolutely ruined," when Macready was so taken with surprise by its perfect naturalness, so disconcerted, and made so uncomfortable, that his assumed character and its language quitted him abruptly, and his mind flew back suddenly to his own brother, as if ruin might have fallen upon him. It was doubtless the same sort of effect that made Charles Kemble's wife say, on hearing Kean's comment, in Othello, on Iago's devilish suggestions as to the source of Desdemona's preference for him, "And so she did!" that it was so natural it made her jump.

'Tis open as my speech!

But the merely natural, after all, is not the consummate thing that poets of the highest genius demand from the stage. There is something beyond, and yet including it, which even the greatest masters rarely, if ever, mount to; and this is what Charles Lamb pointed at when he said that Lear could not be acted. Judging what is popular now, however, by the current reports in praise of it, acting that goes widest of the poet it professes to interpret gets credit at a very cheap rate for the original and surprising; though it seems also evident enough that the thing substituted for the real thing has plenty of cleverness of its own to excuse admirers. Indeed where the art of an actor is even of the first rate, it occupies only a strange middle place between the subtle reaches of poetry on the one hand which it can seldom hope to arrive at, and those triumphs on the other of movement, gesture, tone, and look where it must always help an author more than it can be helped by him. Acting at its very best, in short, by the reason that its master strokes leave the highest things undealt with, is practically a dead leveller; equalizing the Penruddocks and Timons, putting side by side the Lady Randolphs and Lady Macbeths, and lifting the stilted bombast of Zara to the level of Constance's grief and scorn. Godwin said it was worth a day's journey to see Mrs. Siddons walk down the stage as Congreve's captive Queen; and Leigh Hunt used to illustrate what the actor can supply where the poet is deficient, by an instance of the same great actress in the insipid tragedy of the Grecian Daughter. The heroine has obtained for her aged and imprisoned father some unexpected assistance from the guard Philotas, at which transported with gratitude, but having nothing from the poet to give expression to her feelings, Mrs. Siddons started with extended arms and cast herself in mute prostration at his feet. "I shall never," said Hunt, "forget the glow which "rushed to my cheeks at this sublime action." The modesty of the author who would appropriate it as his own, and that of the actor who mistakes for his own those master-hits by Shakespeare of which he always misses the meaning, run in lines exactly parallel.

To the brilliant histrionic genius who blazed out upon the London stage as the elder Kembles quitted it, Dyce was less strongly attracted. First impressions in these matters go for much; even the grief of Mrs. Siddons, to those who had given allegiance to Mrs. Pritchard, seemed the grief of a cheesemonger's wife; and something of the same style of criticism was in Dyce's description of Kean's Duke of Gloster as a pot-house Richard. He was present at his sixth performance of it at Drury Lane, and described vividly what he saw of the enormous crowd it attracted. There was a slowly-moving line of carriages from Coventry Street in Piccadilly up to Brydges Street, and the line from the city was proportionally long.

He took his bachelor's degree at Oxford in 1819; Lord Yarmouth, afterwards Lord Hertford, being his only college contemporary he ever spoke of, and very strange were the stories of him; afterwards he closed the discussions between his father and himself, by entering into orders; and between 1822 and 1825, when his London residence and literary life began, he served two curacies. The first, that of Llanteglos, a small fishing village near Fowey in Cornwall, to which his college, by its special connection with the western counties, had probably helped him. The second, that of Nayland in Suffolk, famous as the scene of the principal labours of a distinguished English scholar and divine. Dyce here collected many curious anecdotes of "Jones of Nayland," and formed a high estimate of his writings and character; but while thus engaged in clerical duties, he made no sally of his own into literature. Shortly before he took his degree he had edited, in 1818, Jarvis's Dictionary of the language of Shakespeare; and in 1821, just before his ordination, Parker of Oxford published for him a small volume of translations from the Greek of Quintus Smyrnæus. The selections were from the first five books of the continuation of the Iliad, and were executed in easy well-modulated blank verse; the object being to show the greater adaptability of that form over rhyme to the simple tone of Grecian poetry.

Thomas Rodd, one of the best-informed dealers of this century in old books, and who rendered Dyce invaluable service in the collection of editions, published for him in 1825 his Specimens of British Poetesses, including some rare and some manuscript pieces, its range being from Juliana Berners to Felicia Hemans. In the preface to it he justly claimed the merit of having first put forth such a work "entirely consecrated to women;" and, expressing the hope that this fact might not be forgotten when more such Anthologies should appear, he added his confident and gallant belief that they would in future centuries be more interesting and exquisite than that which he was laying before our own, because the female mind had been making rapid advances, and female genius had invariably risen with every opportunity afforded to it. Two years later, an edition of the poems of Collins with Dyce's notes came out; and with this began his connection with the late Mr. Pickering, a publisher famous for his accuracy and refinement of taste, and for the luxury of his paper and print. When Dyce's reputation was highest, his payment for his labours would have paid only in a small part for the rare editions which were the tools he worked with; but at the outset he had not even so much contribution to his outlay; and, in other circumstances than his own, the work he did best could not have been done. So limited the sale for it, and so exacting his necessary requirements in regard to printing and other points of production, that it was a liberality merely to share the venture; and, but for Mr. Pickering's enterprise, Dyce would have had no encouragement to continue the design he now began of employing his critical powers and acquirements in the field of early English dramatic poetry.

George Peele's works, with memoir and notes, appeared in 1828, and a second edition was published in 1829; the third or supplementary volume not being added until 1839. With the same care, and even more completeness, in 1831, his memoir and works of Robert Greene were issued; and thus were restored the two leading features of by far the most remarkable picture of the earliest achievements of our English stage, until then so blurred as to be illegible. The edition of Greene was one of the books that last interested Scott, who in a letter to Dyce published by Lockhart says he meant to review it in the Quarterly; but the sad closing illness interposed. No such accurate illustration of the condition of the English theatre and its writers at the critical moment when Shakespeare was entering the scene, will be found anywhere as in these two books; and when Marlowe's works were afterwards added, the trilogy of our earliest drama was complete. Without thorough study of it, Shakespeare himself can never be understood thoroughly. Wide and broad as the distinctions are between those three men and him, the stride they made over the heads of all their predecessors was as great and sudden as the leap he took over theirs; and in the contrast of their three miserable, pitiable, tragical existences, beside what we must infer his to have been from the calm close of it at Stratford, may be found, by such as care to look for it, a lesson of the deepest significance. There is nowhere written, in such terrible characters as in the lives of Greene, Peele, and Marlowe, the story of the depths of degradation to which recklessness and vice may bring the highest intellects.

After a quarter of a century, and singularly careful revision, Greene and Peele were put forth in one volume, Marlowe following in similar shape a little later; and, as it happened with all his books, they have encountered no criticism so keen as his own. "Unfortunately" he wrote to me, "after all the pains I took to "amend the texts, much remains, in Greene and Peele especially, "in a most wretched state, and must ever remain so, owing to "the frightful mutilation they have undergone." It was from this readiness to apply sharp tests to his own work that its general excellence was derived; and his most arduous, minute, and unremitting labour of critical investigation, where no reward was possible to him but to satisfy himself, had too often disappointment for its sole reward. But nothing quenched his ardour in the pursuit which was the interest of his life; and, leaving others to praise what he would himself secretly condemn, he was always ready to begin anew. He was a social man, had many friends, was welcome everywhere for the pleasure of his quiet talk, so full of varied knowledge made doubly delightful by old-world breeding and courtesy; but once immersed in a fresh subject, his power of concentration upon it, and of self-isolation from every other theme or thing on earth, reminded one most of what is told in this particular of the prodigious scholiasts of old. "I never hear "anything, or of anything," he wrote on one of these occasions. "If the conflagration of the universe were to take place to-"morrow, I should not know that it was going on till the flames "had reached Gray's Inn gate." He lived in Gray's Inn Square (number nine) until his mother's death in 1859: when his brother, General Archibald Dyce, forced him out of the chambers where the books that lined every wall had overflowed into all the nooks and crannies in the passages; where, within deal chests and drawers of a marvellous ungainliness, were concealed drawings and engravings of supreme beauty by the earliest and rarest masters; and where treasures of editions that would have deprived a bibliomaniac of his last remaining vestige of reason, were hidden away from all eyes, including his own. He went often to the British Museum to consult a rare book, which it would have taken him too much time to dig out of his own recesses. After quitting Gray's Inn he lived until his death in 33 Oxford Terrace.

Between Peele and Greene he had published, in 1830, four volumes of Webster, to whose indisputable dramatic genius something of a just homage was thus first paid. Three years later he completed the edition of James Shirley which Gifford had left unfinished, adding some notes of special value and a biographical preface. He had meanwhile taken much interest in Mr. Pickering's undertaking of the Aldine Poets, to which, in 1831, 1832, and 1835, he contributed editions and memoirs of Beattie, Pope, Akenside, and (the poems of) Shakespeare. He edited also for Mr. Pickering a choice little square volume of English Sonnets; and between this date and 1838, dropping for the time his labours in poetical literature, he turned to a critical master in another field to whom the success of his own earliest self-discipline had been largely due, in the hope of paying back something of his debt to Richard Bentley. "I published three volumes of his works," he wrote to me, "and originally intended to have greatly in-" creased the collection both from printed and from manuscript " sources; but the indifference of general readers to classical " literature prevented my carrying out the design." What he managed to do was nevertheless worth doing. The book is the best edition we have of the Dissertations on Phalaris, and of the Boyle Lectures; and, if for no other reason, it would have claimed mention for its introduction to him of its printer, Mr. Charles Robson, in whom he found a man of unusual taste and of knowledge still more rare in his calling. He used to compare him, for the extent and accuracy of his acquaintance with many ancient languages, to the famous French and Italian lords of type, Aldus and Etienne; and if he could always have had his own choice, would never have employed any other for his editions. Like Mr. Carlyle, who has had the same experience of the worth of a learned printer, he felt safe only in Mr. Robson's hands.

Two years after the Bentley, having meanwhile completed his supplementary volume of Peele, he sent out an elaborate edition of the plays of Middleton; and between this and 1843, when he began his Beaumont and Fletcher, the weightiest enterprise he had yet attempted, he finished an admirable collection of the Poems of Skelton, and edited sundry pieces for the Percy, Camden, and Shakespeare Societies, which he had assisted in establishing. These pieces are particularly named in a list, furnished by himself, of the several subjects handled by him up to the date of the fifth of his Beaumont and Fletcher volumes; and this list therefore, although its more important information has in substance been given, it may be interesting to add under his own hand. "The following is I believe, with the exception of a few scattered "things, a complete catalogue of my literary sins. i. Select "Translations from Quintus Smyrnæus, 12mo. ii. Specimens of "British Poetesses, 8vo. iii. Poetical Works of Collins, 8vo. "iv. Peele's Works, 8vo, 3 vols. v. Greene's Plays and Poems, "8vo, 2 vols. vi. Webster's Works, 8vo, 4 vols. vii. Shirley's "Works, begun by Gifford, 8vo, 6 vols. viii. Middleton's Works, "8vo, 5 vols. ix. Specimens of British Sonnet-writers, 12mo. "x. Demetrius and Enanthe (i.e. Fletcher's Humorous Lieu-"tenant), from a MS., 8vo. xi. Bentley's Works, 8vo, 3 vols. "xii. xiii. xiv. xv. (In the Aldine Poets.) Life and Poems of "Shakespeare, Life and Poems of Akenside, Life and Poems of "Beattie, Life and Poems (3 vols.) of Pope, 12mo. xvi. Kempe's "Nine Days' Wonder (Camden Society), 4to. xvii. xviii. Porter's "Angry Women of Abington, Drayton's Harmony of the Church "(Percy Society), 12mo. xx. xxi. The Old Tragedy of Timon, "The Tragedy of Sir Thomas More (Shakespeare Society), 8vo. "xxii. Skelton's Works, 8vo, 2 vols. xxiii. Beaumont and "Fletcher's Works, 8vo. To Be, 11 vols."

The eleven volumes that were "to be," he finished duly, and had a just pride in. He would say that he had never bestowed so much labour on a very few pages as in the memoir of Beaumont and his Friend. "It cost me an immense deal of pains" he wrote, "for I tried to make it not exactly what such biogra-"phies too often are, a mere string of dates and extracts from "registers. But it extinguished everything else for me during "the time. Of what has been passing lately I am entirely "ignorant. Indeed I don't believe I am fully acquainted with "anything that has happened later than the 29th of August, "1625, the day of Fletcher's burial." Nor did he ever lose his liking for this book; although more than a year before its last volume came out his mind was already set upon a higher task, to which this, and indeed all those previous labours of which the list is above set down by him, had been but as discipline or preparation. "Remarks" on some recent editions of Shakespeare, published at the close of 1844, were followed in the next few years by similar "Notes" and "Strictures," until at last, on the 25th of July 1853, he arranged with the late Mr. Moxon for an edition by himself of the great poet. It appeared in 1857; and six years later he made arrangement with Messrs. Chapman and Hall for his more valuable second edition, adding to it a noble Glossary into which he poured the reading of his life. This concluding volume appeared in 1867, but already he had resumed a critical investigation of what seemed to him still doubtful passages in his earlier volumes, and had laid the foundation of that third edition which was to be indeed his last. Other work there had been in the interval; to which we are indebted for an improvement of Gifford's edition of Ford, and for our best edition (before named) of a mightier master, Marlowe, beyond question the greatest genius of the Elizabethan stage excepting Shakespeare, and to the modulation and music of whose verse Milton had large obligation; but Dyce's labours to illustrate the poet confessedly greater than them all were never again discontinued. They ceased only with his life. Shakespeare was the subject of his first book, and of his last.

At his death the Times spoke of Dyce as a man who during a long life of study united the patient learning of an antiquary with a real yet chastened feeling for the beauties of our earlier poets and dramatists. The remark fairly expresses the distinctive merit in his critical method which above every other qualified him to deal successfully with Shakespeare's text. In criticism as in other things, every time has its fashion; and the modern style in Shakespeare criticism has been to make much too light of the notes and readings of the Variorum edition. Charles Lamb much impressed me in my youth by telling me, that having tried to read the First Folio he had to fling it down in bewilderment and despair, and that the men of the eighteenth century who first made the poet readable were entitled to everybody's gratitude. They have since, from the critics at least, had nothing but anathema. Any worship of the poet has been reckoned heterodox unaccompanied by a flaying of his commentators. As a general rule, what they left uncorrected has been kept, what they corrected put back, and the safe middle course rarely taken. Dyce on the other hand took precisely that course, and held it with a nice judgment. He reinforced those old labourers in the same field by fresh authorities when he believed them to be right; he exposed what he saw to be their errors; and so steadily kept the balance between rational scrutiny and blind idolatry of the original texts, as to satisfy fairly both the poetic student and the archaic scholar. Thoroughly practised in the language and customs of Shakespeare's day; with his mind fixed on restoring, and never upon amending, his original; an excellent classic; a master of phraseology now obsolete, to whom the old orthography and prosody were familiar; with a good ear, and strong common sense; none of the commentators have excelled Dyce, and very few have equalled him, in the felicitous application, from a remarkably wide range of reading, of identical or analogous phrases and words to the settlement of lines in dispute. One important judgment, it may be added, passed upon Shakespeare more clearly and strongly than by any other commentator, was one on which he spoke with peculiar authority, and is decisive of his capacity as a critic. Conversant with Jonson and Massinger, with Dekker, Cyril Tourneur, and Heywood, and having subjected to his own special study each separate effort by Greene, Peele, Marlowe, Webster, Middleton, Ford, Beaumont, and Fletcher, Dyce altogether objected to placing Shakespeare only at the top of the same list with these his brilliant contemporaries. Hazlitt's dictum for the most part has been silently accepted, that it was a race of giants; that they all were of a noble but common brood; and that among them Shakespeare was only distinguishable as "in shape and "gesture proudly eminent," the tallest, strongest, and most graceful of them all. No, said Dyce, that is decidedly not so. Shakespeare was not only immeasurably superior to his Elizabethan comrades in creative power, profound thought, and insight into the human heart, but stood quite distinctly apart from the whole of them in his methods of delineating character, in language, in versification, and in peculiarities of diction. Dyce added an illustration which was very simple, but has extraordinary weight. It was an ordinary and common practice with all of them to affect their audiences at the expense of nature and probability, and this Shakespeare never did.

All through the years when thus he was busiest with the work that pleased him most, he had been amusing his leisure with a translation of Athenæus, already named, which he began, if I remember rightly, while engaged on Fletcher's plays. He had varying fortune with it; but as it was never in the nature of a task, he made light of the failures and rejoiced in the lucky hits, of which his letters gave occasional small examples. "Here" said one "is something I mean to submit to Luttrell." (Rogers's friend of course, whose name may remind me that the later life of the old wit and poet had no more welcome or familiar companion than Dyce, who published after his death a small volume of his table-talk.) "They are four lines of Theognis, apud "Athenæus, which after much pains I have just translated so as "to satisfy myself.

"Befits not old man with young wife to yoke,
"For she's a skiff which rudder cannot sway,
"Nor anchor hold: but oft, her cables broke,
"At night she harbours in another bay."

Even Athenæus however was not to go smoothly always; for soon after he sent that epigram he was moved to much impatience by one of the cheap "classical libraries" putting out an extremely eccentric version (to characterize it mildly) of the Banquet of the Learned. He had never before admitted any other design in his own translation than an agreeable occupation of leisure; but there was doubtless behind it a hope secretly cherished which any bungling caricature of his original might altogether disable, and this now escaped him in sundry scornful allusions. "Oh yes! I "work away at Athenæus, which, if I ever finish it, nobody will "print, publish, or read! I sent you a few lines the other day, "but what say you to these?

"A numerous party may sit round a table,
"But not more than three, four, or five on one sofa;
"For else it would be a disorderly Babel,
"Like the hireling piratical band of a Rover!"

They belonged to one of the effusions of the translator who had struck Dyce with horror, and who thus burlesqued and cockneyfied what Athenæus so gravely quotes from the divine Archestratus, famous for having first, in his magnificent poem on Gastronomy, called the world's attention to the fact that the dinner-table was the only institution really deserving the attention of mortals, and laying down the rule which so many immortals since have accepted and insisted on, that "It is best "to dine together at one luxurious board, and to let the party "consist but of three, or four, or five at most, else it will be a "camp-revel of hireling and rapacious soldiery!" Nor had this ingenious gentleman been content with making Archestratus cognizant of the building of Babel. He made Æschylus dilate on "other smells besides Macassar!" And of a party whom Clearchus describes as talking about lampreys caught in the Sicilian sea, he reported as "having in their mouths" turbots caught there. Perhaps it was the very extravagance of such things that on reflection reconciled Dyce to his translating rival, for after a few days no more was heard of him. With his own translation, to the very close of life, he continued to indulge himself at odd intervals; and, not very far from completion, it has come with his books to South Kensington: where, some day perhaps, an enthusiast for the Deipnosophists may think it worth the pains of unearthing. The manuscript is a little confused, and through erasures and interlineations not very legible; but it may be also worth mentioning that wherever the Greek character is, that trouble is not. Porson himself did not write it better than Dyce did.

His last letter before his final illness, dated the close of June 1868 (on the 12th he had received some friends at dinner at the United University, where such meetings were frequent in the latter years), told me that he felt, he was "thankful to say, " unusually well;" said he had been reading the Atalanta of Mr. Swinburne, whom he called a genuine singer; and closed thus: "Here's a morsel of Athenæus I have just tortured into " English: an epigram on Cratinus the comic poet, who was " always drunk when he composed his plays!

" 'Wine's the swift courser, on whose wings
" 'The charming poet mounts the skies;
" 'But ne'er to bright imaginings
" 'The water-drinking bard can rise.'

" 'Twas thus Cratinus said and felt,
" Who, while he plied his tuneful task,
" Not of a single wine-skin smelt,
" But breath'd the fumes of a whole cask.

" Hence, in his dwelling, garlands fair
" With roses twined were scatter'd round;
" And hence with ivy was his hair
" Like thine, O Dionysus, crown'd!"

Dyce's next letter, at the beginning of August, written from the bed-room which he never quitted again, was to tell me he might be shown by way of contrast to our old friend the Yellow Dwarf, having become a Yellow Giant. "Being free from pain, " which Horace Walpole defined to be the pleasure of old age, I " ought to be satisfied; but I nevertheless am ill, ill, ill, ex- " hausted from inability to sleep and to eat, my nights intolerable, " my days wearisome because I cannot read, and when or how " it is to end seems uncertain." It was an attack of jaundice which ended in organic derangement of the liver. "I am now," he wrote on the 4th of December 1868, "in the seventh month

" of my martyrdom, and very little better on the whole . . . I " suspect that I am very gradually dying; and if such is the " case, I certainly have no reason to make any childish lamenta- " tion, for I have lived a great deal longer than most people who " are born into this world, and I look back on my past existence " without much disapprobation." He lingered five more months, not without higher consolations than may accompany even the retrospect of a blameless and not ill-spent life; and passed away very peacefully on the 15th of May 1869, within a month of his seventy-first year. He left a great many friends to deplore a loss which they could never replace, for all the qualities that give charm to private intercourse were his in abundant measure.

Dyce's books it had been his intention to bequeath to the Bodleian; but it was suggested that they ought rather to be placed, with the rest of his collections, where they would be within reach of a wider world of students. This appeared to satisfy a wish he had himself strongly indulged, that they should be kept together not merely as a memorial of the employments and enjoyments of his own life, but as a means of helping others engaged in like pursuits; and the South Kensington Museum was chosen to receive them. The bequest was drawn up on the plan of Mr. Sheepshanks's gift of pictures, the ex-officio trustee to whom care of it was committed being the member of the government for the time being charged with the promotion of art-education "now undertaken by the Department of Science " and Art." An extract from the will is prefixed. It states the object of so leaving the collection of books and works of art to be, that they shall be used for reference and instruction, and exhibited to the public under such regulations as the trustee may prescribe; with a condition that the books are not to be lent or removed, and with express stipulation for the provision of a separate room or gallery "proper and sufficient" to contain them. The respect shown to this important bequest; the arrangement of the collections since made; the present catalogue of the books, and the catalogue already issued of the paintings, drawings, and engravings; have thus far attested the value set on the gift by the authorities having charge of it. It is the duty of Mr. Dyce's representatives to add that in preparations connected with the legacy, and especially in the volumes here laid before the reader, invaluable help has been rendered by the zeal and the ability of Mr. R. F. Sketchley. The want of a proper building is the only shortcoming which they have had to bring under notice of the Department, and this is to be remedied without farther delay. The architect of the new works at the museum, General Scott, has now instruction to complete, before any other portion, this much-needed provision; and when a fitting home is afforded to Dyce's Books, Drawings, and Engravings, the public will understand the extent of the generous bequest, and will receive its advantages.

* Penelopes Web. Where, in a christall mirror of feminine perfection represents to the view of euery one those vertues and graces, which more curiously beautifies the mind of woman, than eyther sumptuous apparell, or iewels of inestimable value: the one buying fame with honour, the other breeding a kinde of delight, but with repentance. . . . B. L. 4to. Lond. 1601. 4250

* Greenes Carde of Fancie. Wherein the folly of those carpet knights is deciphered, which guiding their course by the compass of Cupid, either dash their ship against most dangerous rocks, or else attaine the haven with pain and peril. Wherein also is described in the person of Gwydonius a cruell combate between Nature and Necessitie. (With the Debate betweene Follie and Love translated out of French.) B. L. 4to. Lond. 1608. 4251

* Greenes Never too Late. Both parts. Sent to all youthfull gentlemen, desciphering in a true English historie, those particular vanities, that with their frostie vapours, nip the blossomes of every braine, from attaining to his intended perfection. As pleasant as profitable, being a right pumice stone, apt to race out idlenesse with delight, and folly with admonition. B. L. 4to. Lond. 1611. 4252

* Ciceronis Amor, Tullies Love: Wherein is discoursed, the prime of Ciceroes youth, setting out in liuely portraitures, how yong gentlemen, that ayme at honor, should leuell the end of their affections, holding the loue of countrey and friends in more esteeme, than those fading blossoms of beautie, that onely feede the curious suruey of the eye. . . . B. L. 4to. Lond. 1616. 4253

* Greenes Farewell to Follie. Sent to courtiers and scholers, as a president to warne them from the vaine delights, that drawes youth on to repentance. B. L. 4to. Lond. 1617. 4254

* A Quip for an upstart courtier: or a quaint dispute betweene Velvet breeches and Cloth breeches. Wherein is plainely set downe the disorders in all estates and trades. B. L. 4to. (Woodcut on title.) [Lond. 1620?] 4255

The imprint appears to have been cut away, but a pencil note says, "London, printed by G. P., 1620."

GREENE—(continued).

* Greenes Groats Worth of Witte: bought with a million of repentance: describing the folly of youth, the falshood of make-shift flatterers, the miserie of the negligent, and mischiefes of deceyuing curtezans. Published at his dying request: and, newly corrected, and of many errors purged. B. L. 4to. Lond. 1621. 4256
